Not illustrated. 1908 Excerpt: . . . egg weighs about two ounces, and is about 64 parts water and in order to produce eggs, a fowl must have the material necessary. As it is necessary to gather the eggs quite often during the severe cold weather to prevent freezing the attendant collecting the eggs always carries warm water to replenish any fountains that are dry, or are beginning to freeze. Rock salt is also before the fowls where they can get at it at will, and right here let me say that I consider it just as necessary to supply your fowls with salt as it is to supply any other live stock. This is the method of feeding that was followed the past winter, and we were successful in having our egg basket well filled during the severest winter weather. This winter we feed in much the same manner. For the morning meal we take equal parts of wheat, oats and barley, at noon mixture of wheat, oats, kaffir corn, cracked corn, millet and buckwheat, and the evening meal consists of small cracked corn. For the mash we use one of the prepared mash foods made by a reliable poultry supply house, to which is added all of the table and vegetable scraps, also steamed cut clover. -Our laying houses are shed roof structures well built, seven feet high in the front and four feet high in the rear, facing the south, with a board floor, divided into pens eight by sixteen...
