In recent years, the United States has been unable to maintain an international consensus for strict enforcement of all applicable U. N. Security Council resolutions on Iraq, but it has largely succeeded in preventing Iraq from reemerging as an immediate strategic threat to the region. In the wake of the September 11 attacks, there is heightened U. S. concern about the potential threat posed by Iraq's weapons of mass destruction programs and alleged ties to terrorist groups, and the Bush Administration has said it will confront that potential threat, even if it has to act militarily and without formal U. N. authorization. The Administration is employing a number of tactics to reduce the threat posed by Iraq, including international sanctions and diplomacy, reported covert action, and preparations for possible military action. Changing Iraq's regime, which the Administration says remains a U. S. goal, is not openly supported by many other governments, particularly if it involves major military action. However, many governments support U. S. action through the United Nations to enforce Security Council resolutions requiring Iraqi disarmament of its mass destruction weapons (WMD) programs, and the Bush Administration appears to be tailoring its policy to that objective. Part of the debate . . . This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
