Not illustrated. 1912 Excerpt: .operation, assigning each class its place and letting time work out the perfect result. In the graded system it is thought well in many schools to dispense with the closing exercises. The bell is struck or a chord sounded on the piano at the usual hour of closing. After that, any class may quietly withdraw from the room when it so desires, taking pains not to disturb other classes which still linger. A fixed hour of closing often defeats the end for which the teacher has been working throughout the lesson period. The plan of no closing exercises enables her to finish the lesson and make the application in an effective way. Visitors to graded schools have often noted with surprise-and pleasure the interest shown by classes which have lingered ten, fifteen or twenty minutes to finish their work, instead of bolting for the door at the closing signal. EXPLANATION OF THE CHART. The projected dotted lines below the base line indicate the pedagogical division of instruction into elementary, secondary and advanced. The dotted lines show the departments into which the school is divided, viz: --Beginners, Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Senior and Graduate. The figures below the base line show the ideal ages of the pupils in each grade. Of course actual ages only approximate the ideal. A grade is a step up and forward. The several grades are indicated by the steps on the chart, and it is seen at a glance that each class is...
